Braga response to Covid-19

Braga is acting decisively against Covid-19 and was one of the first Portuguese cities to implement measures, in several cases even before the national government.

The first case reported in Portugal was on 2 March and besides the warnings to the public and the preparing to tackle this pandemic, the city of Braga put in place the Contingency Plan of the Municipality of Braga, following all the rules and suggestions of national and international authorities. Then the city of Braga took action.

First Measures

The first measure was to cancel all leisure and sports activities. This was particularly important for older people and people with special needs. Next day, the municipality closed all public facilities open to the public, like libraries, museums, sports facilities, cultural venues and public services. On the same date, were canceled all events until the end of April, like the biggest agriculture fair in the north of Portugal, musical concerts and several cultural activities.

When the spreading of the virus began to develop fast, the municipality took more extreme measures before the national government acted and imposed the National Emergency State. Non-essential personal working for the city sent to work from home with full salary and closed all public buildings within the city. As all schools in the country were closed, parents could ask for a leave of absence to take care of their kids in school age until 12 years. For the professionals still working and to serve meals to kids for needed families, the city maintained some schools open.

Three day before the National Emergency State and with the support of Braga Chamber of Commerce, the municipality also imposed an executive order to close all non-essential shops across the city. The restaurants were ordered to close and only sever in take-away mode. The city exempted several taxes for all business.
