Cities and urban areas have been epicenters of the current COVID-19 crisis. Cities will also be the pioneers of innovation and adaptation to our new realities. While our immediate priority is protecting the public from the negative health impacts of coronavirus, we remain simultaneously steadfast in our commitment to protecting our residents from the destructive effects of violence in our communities.

As mayors, city leaders, and civil society we are on the forefront of saving lives, providing relief, and managing uncertainty in our communities as the pandemic spreads across the globe. For us, saving lives means relying on facts, science and public health expertise. Providing relief depends upon solidarity among our residents, our governing institutions and hard-working people who run our essential services.

Managing uncertainty behoves all of us in leadership positions that, going forward, we redouble our political commitment to building a safer, more just, and equitable future.

Already, we are witnessing knock-on effects from the pandemic. Economic downturn, shifting patterns of violence - including startling increases in violence within the home - increased risk of insecurity, and strains on social services and law enforcement capacities all pose a significant challenge to fostering peaceful, just, and inclusive communities.

In response, we stand in solidarity with one another on the forefront of response to COVID-19. Inspired by the United Nations Secretary-General's appeal for a global ceasefire and appeal for peace in homes, we:

- Urge an immediate cessation of all forms of violence in our cities;
- Commit to maintaining investments in violence prevention even as we address the immediate imperatives of providing COVID-19 health services;
- Reaffirm our commitment to one another through sharing lessons learned from responses to violence reduction during the pandemic;
- Highlight the urgent need for swift adaptation of and increased investment in evidence-informed violence reduction efforts across all sectors of society;
- Recognize that, like the virus, violence imposes unequal burdens on population groups - particularly women, children, and the disenfranchised - whose safety we commit to supporting especially in these most trying times.
Our vision moving forward is one of solidarity. The coronavirus pandemic is a tremendous challenge. Overcoming it will require tremendous resilience. We will address the challenge together, understanding that only through supporting one another will we be able to emerge healthier, more peaceful, and more equal. We welcome others to join our call and stand in solidarity with all who heed a similar vision.

Mayors and city leaders:
- Cali, Colombia
- Chaguanas, Trinidad & Tobago
- Colombo, Sri Lanka
- Dayton, Ohio, USA
- Durban, South Africa
- Edmonton, Canada
- Escobedo, Mexico
- Guadalajara, Mexico
- Hargeisa, Somalia
- Kumanovo, North Macedonia
- Nairobi Municipality, Kenya
- Oakland, California, USA
- Palmira, Colombia
- Tripoli, Lebanon

Partners:
- American Friends Service Committee
- California Violence Prevention Network
- Conciliation Resources
- Creative Associates
- Dayton Peace Museum
- Generations for Peace
- Global Parliament of Mayors
- Global Partnership for the Prevention of Armed Conflict
- International Alert
- Life & Peace Institute
- Partners Global
- Peace Direct
- Peace Initiative Network
- Red Dot Foundation Global
- Search for Common Ground
- Somaliland SDG16+ Coalition
- Stanley Center for Peace and Security
- Strong Cities
- UN Habitat
- UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC)
- University of Dayton